

Lloyd George Has Two Things to Do if He Is Defeated

LONDON, Oct. 28.—(By The Associated Press.)—Should Mr. Lloyd George fail to obtain a dominating or even a good political strategic position in the coming general elections there are at least two things which may occupy his attention—his long-hoped-for visit to America, and the writing of his memoirs.

With receipt of the invitation from Secretary of Labor Davis on behalf of the American gorseed, a Welsh society, the question of the former prime minister's visit to the United States has been revived. His high regard for America and her people has been emphasized in almost every speech since he relinquished the helm of state and it is known he was deeply impressed by the favorable editorial comment cabled to England following the news of Mr. Davis' invitation.

It is considered very possible that, if he turns from political activities, he will go to the United States before plunging into his memoirs both because it would give him a rest, or at least a change from his arduous labors, and would enable him to look at what he might want to say from a distance, giving a better perspective. Then, too, there would be the opportunity of gleaned additional material from the events of the immediate future.

It may be recalled that then when there was considerable criticism of his accepting $400,000 for his book, Lloyd George said he intended to give the proceeds to charity, but now that he no longer holds an official position there is some question as to whether he might not see fit to keep the revenue from his pen as an insurance against adversity during his life "in the wilderness."

Labor Party of Britain Goes Out After Women's Vote

LONDON, Oct. 28.—(By The Associated Press.)—How will the United Kingdom's eight million women voters cast their ballots? This question is puzzling many astute politicians, and the leaders of the Unionist, Liberal, Labor and other parties are seeking the answer. Meanwhile, all are seeking to bring the women to their respective political folds and making counter claims as to how many of these votes they are assured.

"The trouble with the average British middle class woman is that she is too ignorant politically, and today she forms a big percentage of our voters," declared Dr. Marion Phillips, head organizer of the woman's section of the Labor party, in commenting on this point.

"As women only above 20 years of property owners are allowed to vote at present, they are mostly married."

"However, the Labor women are more intelligent and won't vote as do their husbands."

Asked if there was a possibility of a woman being chosen a member of the new cabinet as a result of the general elections, Dr. Phillips said:

"We haven't many women with the necessary political experience. So far we have but two in parliament, of whom one, Lady Astor, is surely not fitted for any such responsible position."

"The British Labor party is making great efforts to educate and to get the women's vote in this election. I have no doubt we shall surprise some of the parties which hope to make the women vote the same way as their husbands."

Bishop Requests Divorced Duke to Make Self Scarce

LONDON, Oct. 28.—(By The Associated Press.)—The much debated question, whether church or state shall control the liberties of individuals, has been brought very much to the front by the action of the bishop of Oxford in writing to the Duke of Marlborough requesting him not to attend the Oxford diocesan conference. It has also brought to a head the problem regarding the divorce question and the church, and bids fair to cause a serious conflict between the church and state.

The bishop's ground is that he cannot admit that the duke has the status of a communicant because while the duke has been divorced and remarried, the law of the church as set forth in the common prayer book makes it very clear that it does not recognize divorce.

The duke, through his solicitors, denies the bishop's statement "that he (the duke) does not possess the full status of communicant" and asserts he has the sanction of his parish priest in Oxfordshire and London, with the full knowledge of "the proper ecclesiastical authorities."

While many of the clergy support the action of the bishop, others dissent. The divorce law reform union declares the church has every right to impose its laws on its own communion but has no right to override the laws of the country outside its own jurisdiction.

The union further declares that Marlborough is legally married, whereas the law of the church says he has contracted an illegitimate union. The incident has aroused widespread interest and is expected to lead to protracted legal proceedings before it is finally settled.

Americans Would Buy Collection of Rare Silver

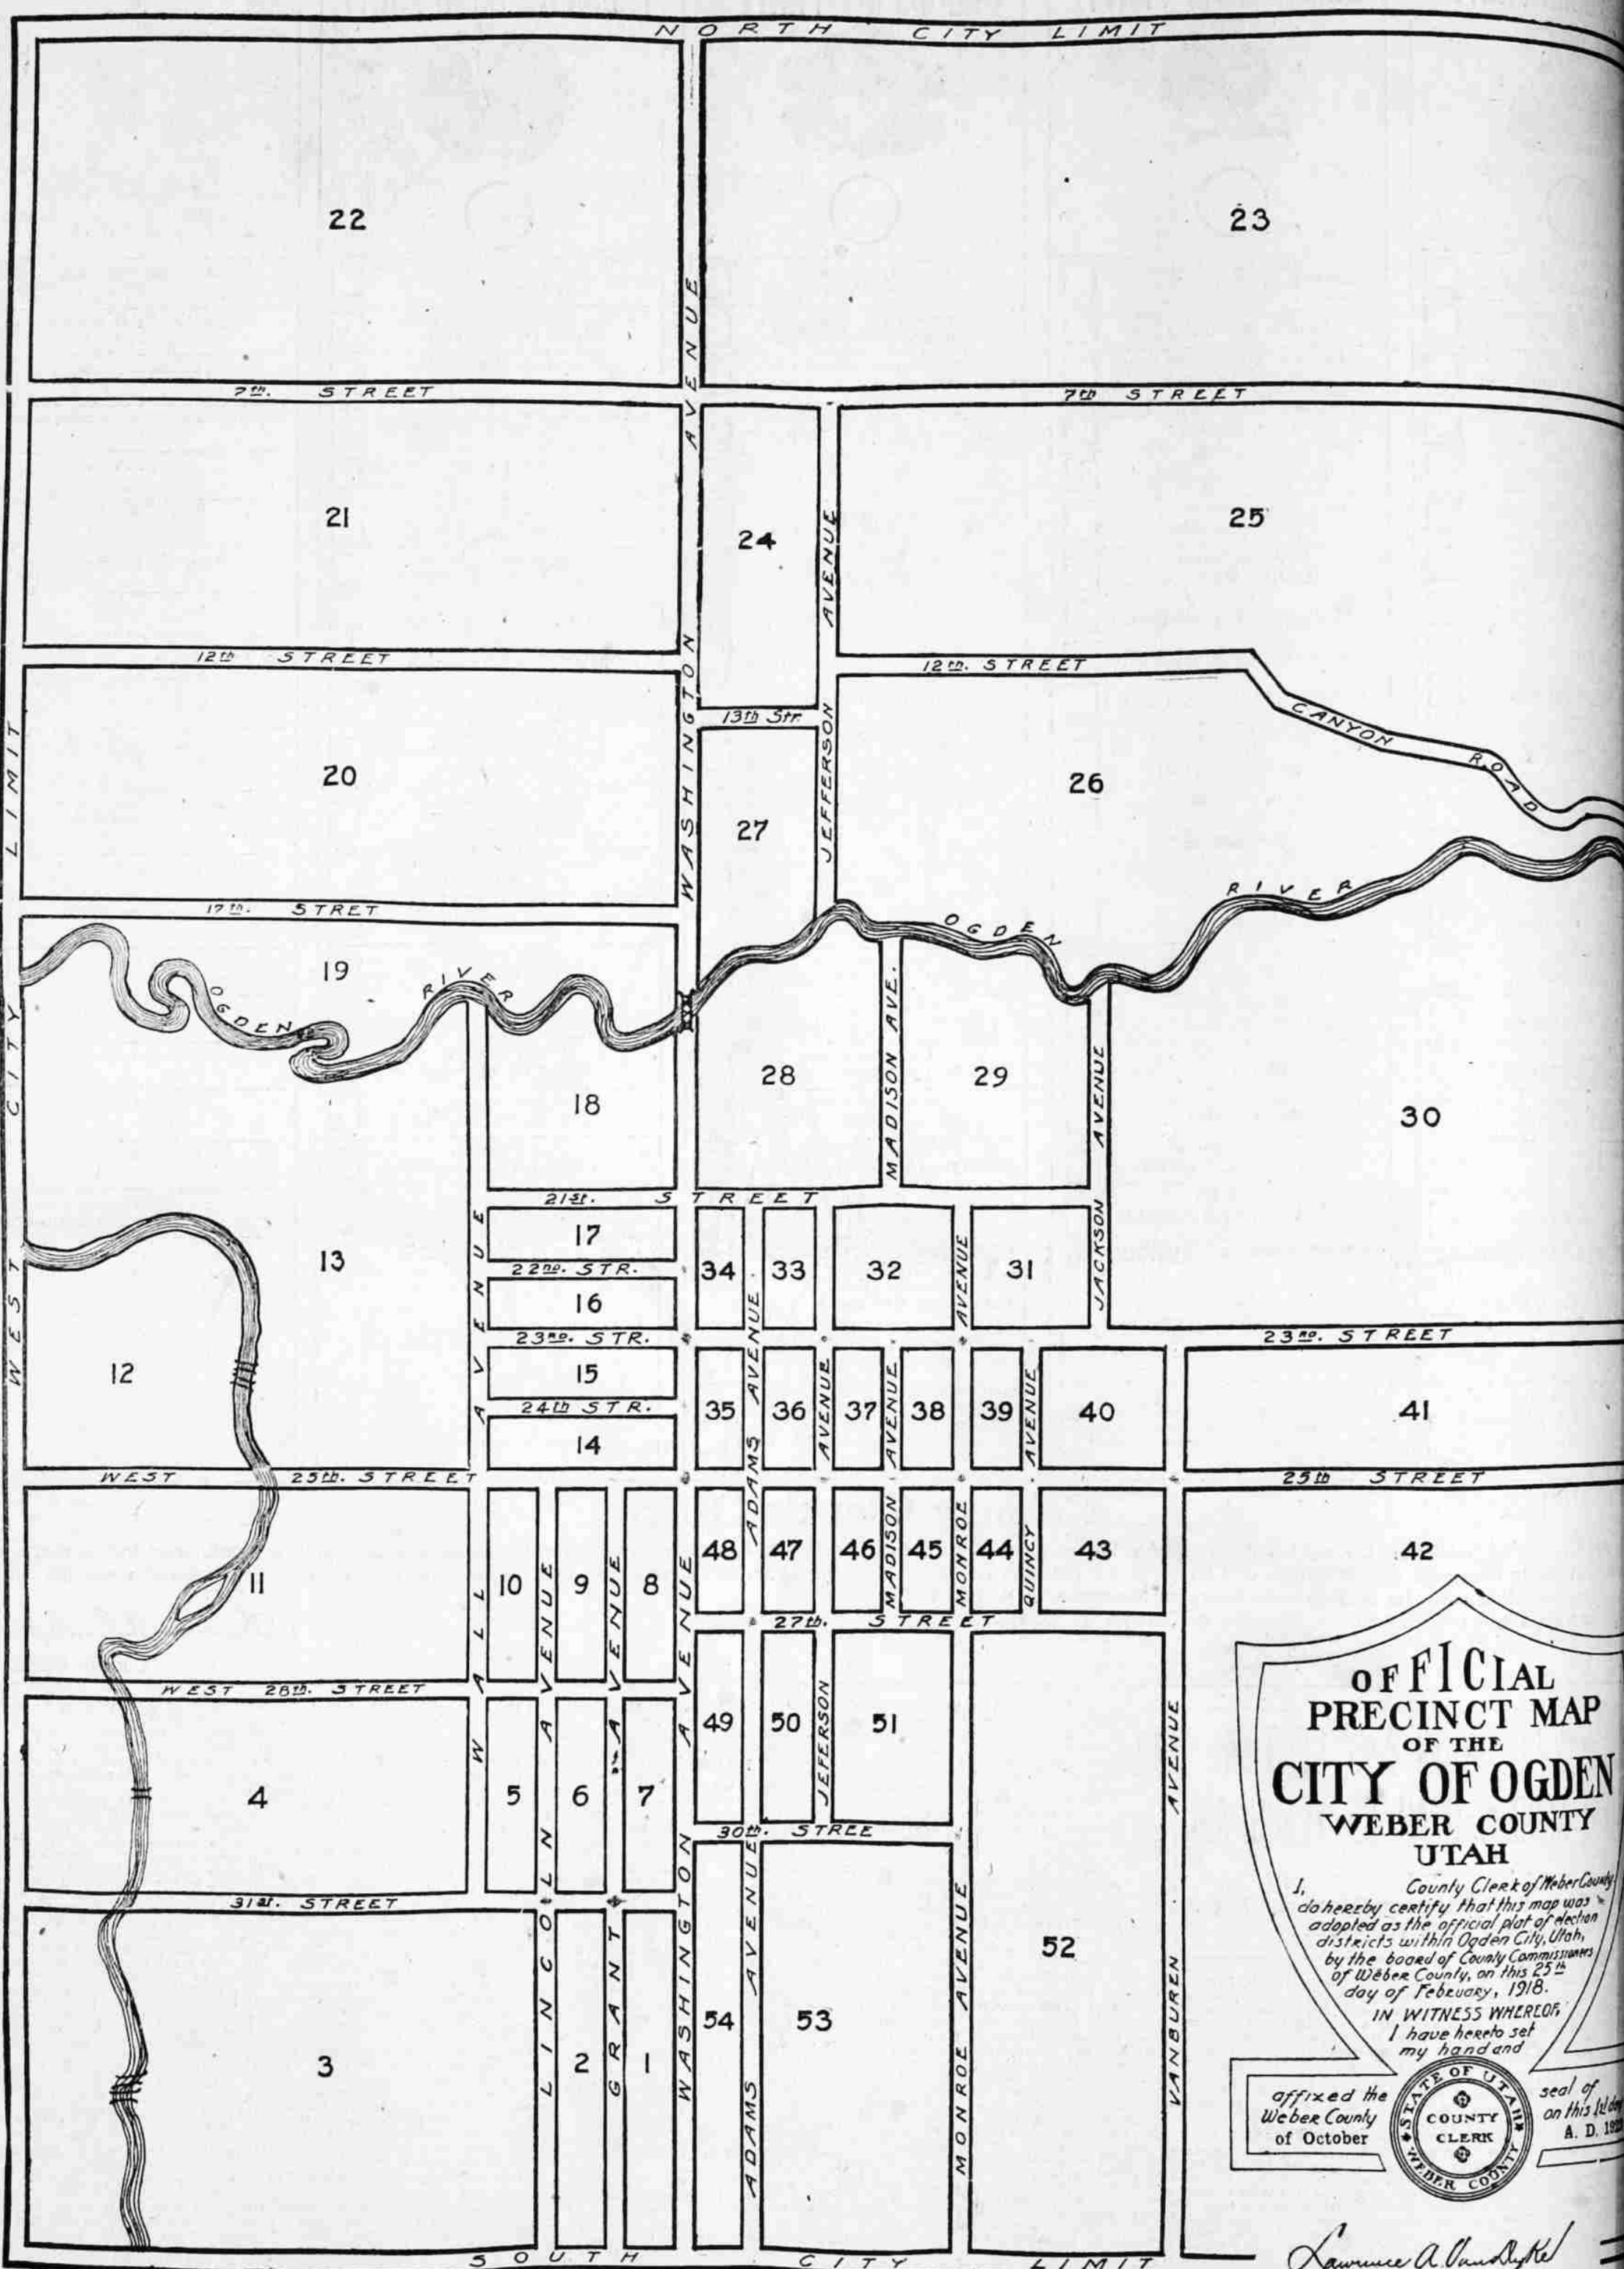

BERLIN, Oct. 28.—(By The Associated Press.)—The quaint society of salt workers at Halle, Prussian Saxony, known as "Halleren" has come into the limelight again through the efforts of American antique buyers to acquire the organization's famous collection of silver, which consists mainly of a number of cups and beakers given to the society by members of the Brandenburg and Prussian royal houses.

For decades before the war, the members of the society made annual New Year pilgrimages to the court at Potsdam, taking with them figures of salt and tasty dishes of food which they were permitted to serve personally to the royal family.

In return they always received mementoes in the form of silver cups, and these are the souvenirs the sale of which they are now considering. One of the beakers bears the monogram of Frederick III. The negotiations at present are deadlocked over the price offered by the Americans.
